Project Description

The company aims to diversify the market for wild-caught seafood in Tasmania. This project will involve increasing processing capacity through the purchase and installation of high-volume vacuum packing machine and a closed live holding system. The ability to vacuum pack in high volumes increases production capacity allowing for an increase in products entering the market.

This infrastructure is intended to develop branded products that capitalise on the unique Tasmanian provenance story including sea urchin roe, wild abalone, wild-caught shellfish and scallop. This project aims to promote the Tasmanian wild-caught seafood industry and create more stable year-round markets for Tasmanian wild seafood products.
